Superpowers call surprise 'summit'

WASHINGTON (AP)—President Reagan and Soviet leader Mikhail S. Gorbachev, ending the diplomatic tug-of-war provoked by Moscow's arrest of an American journalist, agreed Tuesday to meet in Iceland in 10 days to resume the search for an arms control accord.

The surprise summit was arranged as part of a deal that brought the release Monday of Moscow correspondent Nicholas S. Daniloff and the expulsion Tuesday of accused Soviet spy Gennadiy Zakharov. Another element was a Soviet pledge to free Yuri Orlov, a prominent Soviet dissident exiled to Siberia, as well as Orlov's wife, next week.

Hinting at the carrot that lured him away from several apparently inflexible public positions taken in recent weeks, Reagan told reporters, "the chances are better than they've been for many years for reaching some agreement on arms reduction."

Secretary of State George P. Shultz said those chances include "reasonable prospects" for reducing medium-range missiles in Europe.

U.S. officials refused to call the Oct. 11-12 session between Reagan and Gorbachev a summit, and Shultz said the administration did not expect the talks to produce the signing of a new arms accord.

But Reagan told world financial leaders a short time later at the International Monetary fund that the October session is intended "to prepare the ground for a productive summit."

Shultz said the hurry-up meeting scheduled in less than two weeks in the capital of the tiny NATO island nation was proposed by Gorbachev in a letter delivered to Reagan on Sept. 19, which also contained the Soviet Union's latest bargaining position on proposed nuclear weapons reductions.

The two sides had been carrying on arms control discussions at various levels while trying separately to settle the case of Daniloff, whose arrest on what Reagan insisted were "trumped up" spy charges cast a pall over U.S.-Soviet relations and dimmed prospects for a summit this year.

Credit Union funding to be debated by USG

By Bill Slocum
Daily Campus Staff

The future of the UConn Student Federal Credit Union could be riding on tonight's USG Assembly meeting, to be held at 6 p.m. in the United Nations Room of the Student Union.

A $6,000 grant to the credit union, a student-controlled business that serves about 3,000 students, is expected by assembly members to be the main point of debate during the meeting. The union received about $3,500 last year from the Undergraduate Student Government. Many of the same representatives who voted for the grant then are now questioning the effectiveness and ethics of a larger grant.

Vice President Michael Kainen, who voted for the grant last year, said he expects to vote against it tonight, and anticipates that the issue will be moved to the top of the meeting's agenda in preparation for a "big debate".

Kainen said he expects the grant will not be passed because "the [USG] leadership is against it," but, "if Ron [Pape, manager of the credit union] makes a good case, it could pass." Pape is expected to attend the meeting.

According to Kainen, Pape, who could not be reached for comment, has argued that the union has a better loan structure than other financial institutions, but has a narrow profit margin and needs additional money to pay out dividends to student members. Kainen said that Pape has also pointed out that the USG created the union, and thus "has an obligation to support it."

But some USG members have problems with the idea of additional funding. Kainen questions the ethics of such a grant. "The credit union is not a club, it is a profit-making business. If we give them money just because it helps students, why can't we also fund the Co-op or Store 24?"

ConnTech resubmits application to PZC for zone change approval

By Derek Gray
Daily Campus Staff

Developers of the university's proposed 390-acre research and technology park resubmitted a zone change application Monday to the Mansfield Planning and Zoning Commission which, if approved, would allow construction of the park's first phase, a 64-unit part of a housing complex called Celeron Square.

The first zone change application for the land on Hunting Lodge Road was withdrawn in July. Developers said they needed more time to compile information to quell residents' concerns about potential traffic and environmental problems.

The land for Celeron Square is the only parcel in the proposed research park which has yet to receive zoning changes. The rest of the land received the PZC's OK in December.

The application will be received by the PZC at its Monday night meeting and a date for a public hearing will be set then, said Paul Goldberg, president of ConnTech Development Co., developer of the Connecticut Technology Park, to be located just north of campus.

Dorm sex OK, Colo. panel says

BOULDER, Colo. (AP)—Sex in dormitories is OK as long as it doesn't violate a roomate's right to privacy, a University of Colorado student panel has concluded.

The Dormitory Representitive Council voted 16-0 after 90 minutes of impassioned debate Monday to recommend that wording in a campus handbook be changed to reflect that statement.

"If I stood in front of 450 freshmen in Nichols Hall and said I voted to ban sex in the dorms, I'd be shot if they had a gun. I'm serious," said Dan Mihelic, a sophmore who represents Nichols Hall on the council.

A controversy had erupted this fall over phrasing that appeared in the 1986-87 Guide to Residence Hall Living. It banned "sexual activity such as sleeping together [or] going to bed with another person."

Housing officials argued that the contested language was merely a clarification of existing rules against cohabitation, and they served notice that the rules would be enforced.

State Supreme Court denies killer's appeal

HARTFORD, (AP) — The state Supreme Court without comment Tuesday granted the state's motion to dismiss an appeal by convicted killer Michael B. Ross seeking to avoid prosecution in Connecticut on two remaining capital felony charges.

Ross' defense had sought a hearing before the state's highest court on his appeal of a judge's ruling that preserved state jurisdiction to prosecute two capital felony counts against him.

Assistant Public Defender Kent Drager and New London State's Attorney C. Robert Satti addressed the court for about 20 minutes on the issue of whether Ross has a right to appeal now a July decision by Judge Seymour L. Hendel.

After hearing evidence in New London Superior Court, including the testimony of Ross, Hendel determined that Connecticut has jurisdiction to prosecute only two of the four charges originally lodged against Ross in the murders of April Brunais and Leslie Shelley.

Ross, 24, a former insurance salesman from Jewett City, was charged in June 1984 with the deaths of four women in New London County and two others in Windham County.

He currently is serving a 120-year prison term for the 1982 murders of two Windham County women. He pleaded no contest in those cases last December and was sentenced without a trial.

The two capital felony counts that Hendel preserved allege the kidnapping and murder of the two 14-year-old Griswold girls who allegedly were picked up in Connecticut and killed in Rhode Island.

Satti is not questioning the defense's right to appeal the decision.

Drug enforcement bill passed by Senate 97-2

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Senate on Tuesday voted 97-2 to approve a sweeping election-year bill to combat illegal drugs, including a beefed-up enforcement program that would make greater use of the military.

The Senate bill, and a House-passed measure passed Sept. 11, reflect Congress' response to increasing voter concern about drugs. The two bills differ in specific provisions, but are similar in thrust, proposing a broad approach that would pour money into enforcement, education, rehabilitation and crop eradication, and would withhold aid from recalcitrant producer countries.

The final form of a drug bill this year is likely to be resolved in a House-Senate conference.

House Speaker Thomas P. O'Neill Jr., D-Mass., called the Senate bill "better than nothing" and said the House might accept it to "get a foot in the door."

Both measures authorize money for the increased war against drugs, but separate appropriations bills would be necessary to actually spend the funds. Often, Congress does not appropriate the full amount authorized.

The Congressional Budget Office said the House bill authorizes $6.1 billion through the1991 fiscal year, and the Senate bill $3.2 billion through the same period.

By voice vote, a non-binding resolution was passed specifying that a new source of revenue will be needed to pay for the bill, beginning with an appropriation of about $600 million for the current fiscal year.

Budget Committee Chairman Peter Domenici, R-N.M., said some senators want to obtain the money by raising alcohol and cigarette taxes.

Trade deficit shrinks despite economic dip

WASHINGTON (AP) — The U.S. trade deficit shrank dramatically to $13.3 billion in August after hitting a record high the month before, the government said Tuesday. Analysts said the 26.2 percent improvement may be signaling that the worst of the problems are over.

But in less optimistic news, the government reported that its chief economic forecasting gauge fell for the third time in the past four months and new-home sales suffered a fifth consecutive decline.

The various cross-currents are pointing to an economy that remains mired in lackluster growth with few signs of vigor, analysts contended.

While the trade improvement was seen as encouraging, economists cautioned it was not signaling that exports and imports were headed back into balance anytime soon. Analysts predicted the deficit for this year will top $170 billion, far ahead of last year's $148.5 billion record.

Commerce Secretary Malcolm Baldrige said the bulge in the trade deficit in the first half of this year came in part from higher prices of imports, reflecting the decline in the value of the dollar. As those prices deter sales in this country, the deficit will show improvement, he said.

"The sharp improvement from July to August may be the turning point in our trade deficit,"Baldrige said in a statement. The administration is counting on improved trade to help boost economic growth in the second half of the year.

But the Commerce Department also reported that its chief forecasting tool, the Index of Leading Indicators, fell 0.2 percent in August, following declines of 0.1 percent in May and 0.2 percent in June. In July, the index rose1 percent.

...ConnTech developer resubmits application

A hearing date must be set within 65 days of the application's acceptance, Mansfield Town Planner Gregory Padick said.

Goldberg and ConnTech Project Manager Brad Butt said they believe the application, which seeks to change the zoning of the 9.5 acre parcel of land from rural agricultural residential use to multi-family residential use, will be accepted by the PZC.

Michael Helfgott, executive director of the University of Connecticut Educational Properties, Inc., the non-profit corporation leasing the land to the developers, also thinks the zone change will be approved. "I believe their [the developer's] proposal this time will be more thorough than the first time," he said.

The new application includes plans for a two-thirds of a mile long path from Celeron Square, located about 1,000 feet north of Carriage House Road, to the university parking lot north of North Eagleville Road. Residents had complained that the increased traffic on Hunting Lodge Road from the proposed housing would make the road unsafe for joggers and bicyclists. ConnTech wrote in the application that the path "will serve to reduce already light levels of pedestrian and bicycle traffic from both Celeron Square as well as the general populace."

Hunting Lodge Road residents also had said that the increased traffic would make an already dangerous road even more dangerous. Fuss & O'Neill, traffic consultants hired by ConnTech, reiterated in the new application that the traffic increase "will not disrupt continuity of traffic flow on Hunting Lodge Road" and that road conditions "will be sufficient to provide safe and efficient travel for the traffic in the area."

Hunting Lodge Road has recently been widened from 21 feet to 22 feet, Grant Meitzler, of Mansfield's department of

Advisory Committee on Athletics to meet in FAC this evening

By Kristina Martell
Daily Campus Staff

A committee charged with implementing the recommendations of the athletic Task Force will hold its first meeting today.

The Advisory Committee on Athletics, consisting of faculty, students, staff, trustees and alumni, will meet to discuss the progress of the Task Force, said John Allen, head of the committee and chairman of the geography department.

"We want to continue looking at relationships between athletics and academics," Allen said. The Task Force committee established an academic counseling program for athletes. "We are interested in that program," he said. "We will see that each student receives the best education."

Allen said they will continue to monitor the progress of the newly established advisory center. He said the committee is looking for a director and has three qualified applicants.

Also on the agenda for today's meeting is compiling a worksheet that includes recommendations made by the Task Force last spring. "We are concerned with our own work plan for the year and with the success of other athletic programs," Allen said.

Allen said the committee wants to look at the success of university sports other than football and basketball, "such as the women's field hockey team and the men's soccer team," and find out why they are successful. He said he wants to locate those that have contributed to the success and try to transfer that attitude to other athletic teams.

The meeting will take place at the Faculty Alumni Center after a light supper at 7 p.m., Allen said.

Student charged in spring sink fling

By Gail Duncan
Daily Campus Staff

A UConn student was arrested yesterday for allegedly throwing a sink out of a fourth-floor dorm window and damaging two cars with the sink last May, campus police said.

Scott D. Cowen, 22, of Ashford was arrested by UConn police on a Rockville Superior Court warrant and charged with second-degree reckless endangerment and third-degree criminal mischief, which is vandalism.

On May 7, 1986, in the early evening, Cowen removed a university sink and threw it out of a fourth-floor window in the co-ed Terry B dorm in Frats Quad, police allege. The sink narrowly missed a pedestrian and scratched the paint on a Pontiac Sunbird and a Jeep Cherokee, cracking the windshield of the jeep, police said.

Cowen is not on campus this semester because he is working at a full-time job as part of the university's Cooperative Education program. Police said that Cowen has been very cooperative throughout the investigation. The arrest was not made until this fall because of processing delays, police said.

Both charges are class B misdemeanors, each punishable with a maximum of six months in prison, a $1,000 fine or both. Cowen was released on a written promise to appear in Rockville Superior Court on Oct. 14.

Voter registration today, tomorrow

Students can register to vote in the Nov. 4 elections at the Student Union and library lobbies from 9 a.m. to 4 p.m. today and tomorrow.

Students can register to cast ballots in their hometown or here in Storrs.

A coalition of student groups is campaigning to increase voter registration and turnout among UConn students and members of the local community. Goals for the drive are to register 200 students today and tomorrow and a total of 800 new voters by Oct. 14.

"We're really looking forward to a good turnout this year, both at registration and at the polls," said Doug Adkins, a member of the Connecticut Public Interest Research Group, one of the sponsors of the drive.

According to the National Student Campaign for Voter Registration, voter turnout among 18-to 24-year-olds has been consistently lower than the national average. However, there was an increase in registration and turnout among this age group in 1984. In their 1984 campaign, the national organization registered 500,000 students on campuses across the country.

Registration booths will be marked by red, white and blue balloons at the Co-op, library, and Student Union today and tomorrow.

Besides ConnPIRG, the drive is sponsored by the Black Students Association and Students for Peace.

public works, said. Butt said this, combined with the fact that the road has been targeted by the state Department of Transportation for $1.2 million in additional road improvements this year, should make the road safer.

Residents and PZC members were also concerned that chemical waste pits at the university's landfill near the housing site would contaminate the complex's soil and water.

Lenard Engineering, environmental consultants hired by ConnTech, reiterated the findings of their July study in the new application that there is "no appreciable contamination at the Phase I site." The study also showed the spreading of contamination is unlikely and that, if it did, it would spread away from the housing complex.

The complex's water would not be contaminated because Celeron Square will be served by UConn's water and sewer systems.

The new application includes plans for a monitoring program "to provide an early warning system for prompt, positive response" to possible contamination. Two wells, using hand-operated pumps, will be sampled for contamination at quarterly intervals the first year after the complex is completed, the application read. They will be checked semi-annually for the next five years and annually thereafter.

Robert H. Clawson, assistant vice president of facilities management at UConn, said that the university received permission from the Department of Environmental Protection to remove the chemical pits. Bids by contractors for removal were taken on Sept. 12, but because the low bid exceeded the funding available and a statutory limit of$250,000 placed on UConn by the state, the bid could not be accepted.

The university obtained additional funding from the Office of Policy and Management and had to turn the contracting over to the Department of Administrative Service's Bureau of Public Works because the contract would cost more than $250,000. The DAS will advertise for contractors in every county of the state for three weeks before taking bids. Once a contractor is selected, the contractor must get approval from the DEP.

"I believe, at this time," Clawson wrote in a Sept. 26 letter to ConnTech, "that the project [removal of the pits] will be initiated in calendar year 1986 but will not be completed until the spring of 1987."

"I think people have a right to want that [the chemical pits] removed," Helfgott said. "It should be removed. It will be removed."

Town residents were also concerned about who would be allowed to live in the 64-unit housing complex.

Butt said that although ConnTech will not discriminate against anyone, university graduate students and junior faculty will be given preferences. If any space was left over, non-university affiliated people would be accepted. Butt said that because there is "a demonstrated lack of housing for grad students," he doesn't feel the selecting process is unfair. Graduate students and junior faculty members are a needed resource, he said, and therefore have "a direct bearing on the ultimate success of the park."

...USG to debate credit union; discuss two extra reading days

Steve Protter, chairman of the Public Relations Committee and a member of the credit union, said that last year's funding seemed to benefit neither the credit union nor USG. "When is this business going to start making money?" Protter asked. USG has given the union about $30,000 since its inception eight years ago, Protter said.

Protter said "a conflict of interests" as both a representative and a union member might force him to abstain from the vote, although "if it comes down to it, I won't vote for it."

Protter and Kainen also questioned whether USG could afford such a grant. "Everyone is asking for money," Kainen said. "We're just chewing through the cash." Both attributed the lack of money to club demands and a low student fee. The introduction of a computer system at USG would put additional demands on the low surplus, Protter said.

"We haven't seen what would happen if we say no," Kainen said. "If the union starts to go under, I would be inclined to save it, but I would like to see if it can float on its own."

Also on the agenda is a proposal by Rep. Chris Van Doren to add two extra free days to the last weekend before finals, so that students can better prepare for the semester-end exams. However, that motion is expected to be set aside for future consideration.

Protter, who expects "unanimous" support for the bill, says that in order to make a strong case to the university, "student support" is needed, as well as an adequate plan to show how the adjustment in the calender can be made.

The last official vestiges of Allan Driscoll's tenure at the USG will be swept away as the assembly formally abolishes the position of executive director, from which Driscoll resigned two weeks ago. In a related measure, USG by-laws refering to the post will be amended. Kainen said this would clear the way for a new advisory post to be created by USG.

A proposal will also be voted on to give Protter signature power on all USG advertising. This move is designed to "make sure the USG ads are consistent with the image we want to portray," Protter said.

Last semester, according to Kainen, USG had problems with running "contradictory" and thus "embarrassing" ads. "Now only one person will be accountable," Kainen said. The proposal is expected by several members to pass.

News from here, there and Boston

BOSTON (AP)—The Boston Red Sox playoffs were not the only popluar attraction coming up. Just a mile from Fenway Park, 400 people lined up at Symphony Hall and snapped up 1,300 tickets to a rare concert by pianist Vladimir Horowitz.

"With only half a house to sell, a lot of these people aren't going to get tickets," said Marty Jones, marketing director for the Wang Celebrity Series. They were sold out in two hours Monday, she said. The rest of the tickets were offered to season ticket holders.

The 82-year-old Horowitz's Boston appearance Oct. 19 drew ticket-seekers from a distance. The only other concert he plans for the rest of the year is in Chicago.

"I made calls to my musician friends in Boston to see what time I should get in line," said Carole Friedman of upstate new York.

"Someone said 5:30 a.m. but that seemed beyond the pale for me."

NEW YORK (AP)—Jane Pauley says she feels like a kid at the end of summer as she nears the end of a maternity leave and prepares to return to work on NBC's Today show Oct. 10.

"It's like going back to school in the fall," she said in a telephone interview Tuesday. "When the weather changes, one puts the summer clothes away and goes back to school.

"I've had a nice long summer vacation."

Pauley has been on maternity leave since late July and gave birth to her third child, Thomas, on Aug. 27. she and her husband, Doonesbury cartoonist Garry Trudeau, also have 2-year-old twins.

"We were blessed," she said of her new son. "He's a classic good baby. ...He's been a dream to take care of, never mind that there's only one of him."

JERUSALEM (AP) —Opera tenor Placido Domingo greeted an audience in Hebrew after the premiere of the film version of Otello in which he stars.

Domingo, who launched his operatic career at the Israel Opera in 1962, and Italian director Franco Zeffirelli attended a gala showing of the film Monday night.

He was loudly applauded when he thanked the crowd in halting Hebrew after he was made an honorary fellow of Jerusalem's Hebrew University. He then switched to English.

Domingo has performed in Israel several times since launching his career here, most recently in July when he sang at an open-air concert dedicated to the victims of the Mexican earthquake. The Mexican-born singer lost four relatives in the disaster.

COSTA MESA, Calif. (AP) —Conductor Zubin Mehta helped open the $70 million Orange County Performing Arts Center with works of Aaron Copland and Beethoven and an original composition commissioned for the event.

Telegrams arrived from President Reagan and opera star Beverly Sills, and soprano Leontyne Price sang the national anthem at Monday night's celebration.

Mehata, conductor of the New York and Israel philharmonic orchestras, led his previous orchestra, the Lost Angeles Philharmonic, just as he did in 1964 at the opening of the Los Angeles Music Center.

Opening Monday night's program was the world premiere of a work commissioned from William Kraft, Of Celebrations, Pageants and Ceremonies.. Also on the program was Copland's A Lincoln Portrait narrated by actor James Whitmore, and Beethoven's 9th symphony.

Royal butler is for hire

LONDON (AP)—If Prince Charles and Princess Diana turn down your dinner invitation, you can still get the next best thing—their butler.

The Daily Mirror reported Tuesday that the royal couple's butler, Harold Brown, is available to officiate at private functions for just $45.

A Buckingham Palace spokeswoman who requested anonymity confirmed the report. "I think this not an unusual thing to happen," she said. "It's certainly known to the prince and princess."

Susan Hamilton, a London society caterer who acts as Brown's agent, said Brown usually handles functions for "discreet city people and private households."

Buckingham Palace said Brown was not available for interviews, but The Mirror said it caught him posing as a prospective client, and quoted him as saying he readily accepted and would prefer payment in cash.

Brown said he would never do anything to embarrass his employers. "I'm careful about it," he was quoted as saying. "I don't go anywhere I might see their friends of anyone they know."

Stained glass windows are no pain for church

EAST HARTFORD (AP)-In the tradition of medieval worshippers who built their churches stone by stone, congregants of Faith Lutheran Church are painstakingly assembling stained-glass windows to fill their church.

The sanctuary and sacristy will be adorned with 23 colorful windows worth perhaps more than $200,000 when the year-old project is finished in 1988.

On Sunday, the 500 member congregation dedicated the most elaborate window yet, depicting the Exodus from Egypt.

Vandals had broken many of the church's windows, composed of simple retangles of rough, pebbly, "cathedral glass," said the church pastor, the Rev. Paul E. Henry. The congregation balked at the $5,000 to $15,000 it would have cost to replace each window with elaborate stained glass, Henry said.

Last year, Hans DePold of Bolton suggested the congregation create its own windows. Audrey Schiller of Glastonbury swayed skeptics by learning the techniques of glass-working, then designing a simple Nativity scene now in place in the back of the church.

The church council agreed on a plan for 19 windows depicting bibilical events, such as the flood, the creation and the crucification. Each of the windows consists of a main rectangular panel 5 feet high over a smaller, 1-foot panel. Four small windows in the rear of the church will depitct symbols of the four Gospels.

About 35 members of the congregation took a training course from a professional glassworker and practiced making small items.

"Everyone had to make their own project-whether a suncatcher or a Tiffany lamp-before they could work on a window," Henry said.

Every Monday and Wednesday night, grinders whir in the church kitchen as volunteers smooth the sharp edges of cut glass. As the pieces of red, yellow, green and opalescent blue are soldered into place like mosaic tiles, however, the kitchen becomes quiet.

"There are some nights when it gets so complicated that you won't hear a peep for 20 minutes," said Betsy Hanson of Glastonbury.

"You'll cut yourself and you won't know until you see the blood spill on the glass," said Eileen Scoles of Glastonbury.

"Those horses look like they're coming right out of that window," Hanson said.

Rock videos are tame compared to prime-time TV

PHILADELPHIA (AP) — Rock videos, under fire for their blood, gore and slow-motion mayhem, have yet to rival the violence on prime-time television, according to a study published by the University of Pennsylvania's Annenberg School of Communications.

"Nothing is as violent as prime-time TV," said George Gerbner, dean of the Annenberg school and editor of the Journal of Communications, which published the report.

"I think the concerns about rock videos have been exaggerated. There does not seem to be a specific reason for focusing on music videos per se."

The researchers stopped far short of endorsing music videos, however. They said their analysis of 42 hours of videos led to the conclusion that they are violent, male-oriented and laden with sexual content — criticisms voiced by feminists and the National Coalition on Television Violence.

About 75 percent of all prime-time shows contain violence, compared with 56 percent of all "concept videos," which dramatize the music, according ot the study's authors, Barry L. Sherman and Joseph R. Dominick of the School of Journalism and Mass Communication at the University of Georgia.

The study covered the 1985-86 prime-time season. Gerbner said this week he wouldn't discuss the new TV season because, he said, impressions usually are misleading.

The study found that music videos don't have as much sex as prime-time television — 1.4 sexual episodes per minute versus 1.8 on prime-time — but the sex is more graphic. However, most of the sexual involvement consisted of non-intimate touching, such as handshaking. "It's well-charged, with a lot of sexual implications," Gerbner said.

Sex in videos has a distinctly adolescent slant that is "long on titillation and physical activity but devoid of emotional involvement," the researchers said.

Women are often depicted as upper-class sex objects who attract lower-class males, as in Billy Joel's "Uptown Girl" video, the study said.

Prime-time shows have more violence because they have extended plots, unlike most three-minute videos, Gerbner said.

"With a plot, you need conflict, suspense, something active," he said. "Violence is the cheapest, most active thing going. Not that it's popular — it's cheap to produce."

Videos on the MTV network and on such shows as "Friday Night Videos" and "Night Tracks" rely less on action and more on the performers and their music, he said.

The researchers found several key differences between videos, which are directed at teen-agers and young adults, and conventional TV, which is aimed at 25-to 49-year-old consumers:

—Women in videos are more likely to be aggressors than victims, often appearing as "predatory females."

—On conventional television, non-whites are more apt to be victims than aggressors. In videos, non-whites are equally likely to be either.

—On television, children, teen-agers and adults all get abused. In videos, older adults, especially mother figures, are the predominant aggressors. The young are regularly persecuted on video by their "establishment elders" and also by their non-white peers.

Reagan losing one in South Africa

It looks like Reagan may finally not get his way on something.

The House of Representatives did not give him the satisfaction of supporting his recent veto on South African sanctions, but instead overrode it by a larger margin than the margin they originally passed it on.

The Senate vote is expected this week, and if they vote like they did before the Reagan veto, the sanctions measure adopted by Congress will become law.

The sanctions will ban all new investments in South Africa, terminate landing rights in the U.S. for South African Aircraft, and bans U.S. imports of South African's minerals, steel, textiles, military vehicles and agricultural products.

These sanctions, compared with the plan Reagan wanted approved, will show the Afrikaaners that the U.S will not support such abuse of human rights in any form. Reagan wanted sanctions that would not completely sever the U.S. from South Africa, but obviously the vast majority of elected government officials disagreed.

With its extensive support in the House and Congress, and even on campus here last Spring and with continuing calls for divestment at Yale including the arrest of 12 protestors last week, Reagan still supports "lesser sanctions". He feels that by imposing these sanctions, it would hurt South African blacks. But they have been hurt enough, and our interests belong elsewhere.

Worldwide scorn and constant uprisals in South Africa have not made the conditions better. It's time to take a stronger stand on the issue and do someting that will have an effect on the situation instead of just criticizing it. Maybe other countries will follow the U.S. with major sanctions, forcing the Afrikaaners to accept equality as a way of life.

The black majority has been so abused by the white minority. Let's stop helping a country that practices blatant racism, and force change by pulling all interests out of that segregated country.

Vice president tops cop in parking space battle

Tony Pratapas has a full-time job as a cop, but for several years he picked up extra income by moonlighting as a security guard at Comiskey Park, the home of the Chicago White Sox.

As some baseball fans know, when Misters Einhorn and Reinsdorf bought this franchise from Bill Veeck a few years ago, they decided that many veteran Sox followers were uncouth beerguzzlers.

As corporate types, they didn't care for this sort of behavior. As a baseball type, as well as a beer drinker and free-spirit, Veeck never saw much harm in a bit of rowdyism.

So the new owners hired an army of off-duty lawmen to give the fans some extra couth.

One recent afternoon, Pratapas came to the ballpark to perform his job of maintaining civilized behavior.

That day, he was assigned to the employees parking lot, where he was to watch out for vandals, thieves and ruffians.

Just before game time, a car pulled into the lot and swung into a spot reserved for the handicapped.

A man who appeared to be sound of limb stepped out of the car.

The parking lot attendant walked up to the man, pointed to an empty space nearby, and said: "Pull it over here, sir."

The man shook his head and said, no, he was going to leave the car where it was.

Pratapas was standing nearby and decided to speak up. He said the following conversation took place.

Pratapas: "Sir, are you handicapped?"

The man said: "No, but I have a reserved spot."

Pratapas said: "Sir, you can't park in a handicapped space if you aren't handicapped."

But the man said: "I'm the vice president."

Pratapas said: "I don't really care who you are. It's a space reserved for handicapped fans. It's not reserved for personnel."

That was correct. Outside the lot, there is a sign that directs the handicapped to those spaces.

But the man said: "You don't understand who I am. I don't want my car vandalized."

And Pratapas said: "You should feel guilty about parking in a handicapped spot. Doesn't that bother you?"

"No, that doesn't bother me at all," the man said.

Pratapas, getting a little angry, said: "You probably do the same thing at the supermarket."

"If I do, it's none of your business."

"Is it going to kill you to walk an extra 20 feet? There's a lot of empty spaces nearby."

But the man strode away and disappeared through the employee entrance.

It turned out that he was Michael McClure, the vice president for marketing of the White Sox franchise.

And a vice president for marketing clearly has a higher rank in the corporation than a part-time security guard.

So, when the game ended, a security supervisor called Pratapas in and told him he was fired for lipping off to McClure.

"Yeah, they told me I was canned for opening my mouth to him," Pratapas said later. "But things like that bother me. Why make handicapped people-and a lot of them come to the games-walk farther than necessary? That's the reason they put those spaces close to the ballpark in the first place.

When McClure was asked about the firing, he said in a very vice-presidential manner: "I was not aware that the gentleman in the parking lot had been terminated."

"I had absolutely nothing to do with it, other than to mention to park personnel that he had been abusive."

He also said that he and other busy White Sox executives are sometimes delayed at meetings. So they expect a few spaces be kept open for them so that they can park near the entrance.

This, he said, was the first time he had been hassled about it.

"I've been here five years,"McClure said, "and I've never had any problem before. I had never seen the man before, and this incident was no big deal to me."

Pratapas said: "I worked there five years too. And it's no big deal to me either, except that I wouldn't have been moonlighting if I couldn't use the extra money.

So I guess this just shows that the Einhorn-Reinsdorf approach to seeing more orderly behavior at the ballpark is getting results.

They are rid of an uncouth, unruly security guard.

And the world is a little safer place for corporate vice presidents.

Snackbar to coffeehouse, is this what we want?

Intellect and culture. Strange concepts. Lecturers. (Ford?) Concerts. (Beaver Brown, again??) Art exhibits. (Where's the Atrium?) Educated conversation (AS 55? Thumpers?) Films. (Trans-Lux?) Poetry and Essays. (Shreds?) Good coffee. (Jungle cafe?) Community interaction: freshmen, graduate students, and professors (Football games?)

So, a group of people got together and decided that a student-run coffee-house, with a diversified forum, would fit nicely where our beloved snack bar once dwelled. They presented this idea to the people in charge of allocating space in the Student Union: The Student Union Board of Governors. SUBOG is a reasonable organization; they accepted applications and suggestions from a variety of sources in order to help them decide.

Just what should occupy the window-banked corner room on the first floor of the Student Union, in the center of campus?

The answer they chose was pool tables. Apparently, a problem exists, because handicapped students do not have access to the pool room in the Student Union, South. This is, indeed, a problem. It is discriminatory to disallow such access.

A compromise was then offered by the coffee-house promoters. Why don't we put two pool tables in that room, so that they will be more readily accessible to those who are denied access to the upper floors of the Student Union, South?

The care necessary to successfully transport these tables is very expensive. Once they are moved and the room is opened, they will not be able to receive the same protection that they do upstairs, by sheer virtue of the volume of traffic to which that area is subject. The tables will be destroyed there quickly enough that no one will have access to them and the problem of discrimination will disappear. Unfortunately, so will the opportunity to shoot pool. Handicapped students deserve the right to shoot pool, if they want it, but there is no evidence that two accessible tables are not enough.

The question of how to allocate the remaining space still exists. The potential offered by instituting a coffee-house on campus, especially in such an opportune location, is overwhelming. There are art exhibitions, round table discussions, topical lectures, first-rate lowcost concerts, educational films, and fund-raising opportunities for every club and cultural center on campus just waiting for an outlet. The coffee-house will offer the perfect outlet for these and many more ideas.

Imagine a place on campus where you can stop by before, between, or after classes, any day of the month and find a different cultural or intellectual event taking place. Isn't this pursuit of new ideas and opportunities for the mind and the imagination why we are at college in the first place?

Initial costs, maintenance, and programming in such a place would be minimal at most. We are not asking for a building to be built, or an elevator to be installed. We are asking for a trial period of a month or two during which to practice our ideal and see just how well it can work.

Professors on our campus are usually well-versed in issues they are never given the opportunity to share with their students. While some of us would be interested in hearing a lecture or two about certain current events, we don't ordinarily find this just cause to add another course to our schedules. The coffee-house could provide the arena for such informal learnings.

Impromptu theater groups, budding bands, practicing poets, concerned citizens, professional bands caught between the circuit of New York and Boston, campus comedians, and informed local lecturers are all attainable. Some of our greatest natural resources are free and looking for an opportunity to share their talents with their community right here on campus. Let's give them that opportunity.

A common area where members from every aspect of the campus community can reach each other on a relaxed, friendly level will greatly improve the morale and interactive abilities our campus has been accused of lacking.

Petitions have begun circulating campus, imploring SUBOG to give such a project a chance. Sign the petitions next time you're in the Stuident Union. Let us know if you want to help out with the coffee-house itself. This university belongs to all of us. Let's mold it to fit our dreams.

Preppies fight back against stereotype

◊On the way to class the other day, I had a rebirth of sorts, which I feel compelled to relate. Actually, I was hurrying to class because I was running late again. As usual, I was faced with the formidable task of deciding what to wear. I mean, it just isn't fair, I even got up at 5:00 a.m. so that I would have plenty of time to match my crocodiles. Still, I just couldn't decide between my lavender Izod and my bright pink Polo. Finally, in desperation, I called home (on Daddy's credit card, of course) to Mummy and asked her what I should do, and as usual, she picked out a really swell combo. (Moms are great that way, you know.)

Anyway, there I was, strolling along and feeling really good about my appearance. I was sporting my brand new torquoise Izod with the collar starched up and the tail hanging out, and a spiffy pair of madras Ralph Lauren shorts (48 dollars at G.Fox, don't you know). I though to myself, "Gosh Biff, you are the ultimate ladies' man, if fact, you are probably the hottest thing this campus has ever seen!" Just then, I felt a pain in my foot. Wouldn't you know it, a pebble had somehow fallen into my Sperry Topsiders (one of the inconveniences of not wearing socks) and was causing me no small pain. As I stooped to remove the offending pebble, I was passed by a gentleman wearing faded Levi's 501 Button Fly jeans ("Victim of advertising," I thought to myself), an equally faded Levi's jean jacket upon which someone had apparently spilled blotches of bleach, beneath which he wore a red "Bob's Surplus" T-shirt. To top it all off, he wore a pair of beat up Nike basketball sneakers, and get this, he hadn't even bothered to tie them! In fact, they were almost entirely unlaced, which probably attributed to his scraping the ground with his soles every time he took a step. "Obviously, someone who isn't totally obsessed with the way he looks," I concluded.

In any case, he turned and gave me a strange look, like maybe I was thinking that he must think I look like a total fag, which of course I wasn't thinking. What I was thinking was, "Gee, that guy is a real individual. In fact I haven't seen a 'Bob's Surplus' T-shirt worn under a jean jacket in oh, maybe three hours." To be fair though, that other T-shirt was yellow, and the bleach blotches (More careless people again!) were in different locations on the jacket. I could also tell that this guy wasn't a conformist by the degree of fading on the jean jacket. Judging by this guy's jacket, he had been wearing his for quite a while. In fact, it's possible that he was one of the trend-setters in the jean jacket field, you know, before everyone had them. Also, even though he had a Levi's jacket and jeans, Nikes and a "Bob's Surplus" T-shirt, I noticed that he wasn't covered from head to toe with conformist labels like Izod or Polo.

Anyhow, I was so impressed I ran over (Actually, I kind of hopped, as I still had one docksider off) and I introduced myself. I said, "Excuse me, my name if Biff and I don't want to conform and look like the other fifteen percent of UConn that is preppy or making a feeble attempt at it." Then I asked him for directions to Bob's Surplus Store, because although they do sell Levi's and Nikes at G.Fox, they don't carry such high-fashion items like "Bob's Surplus" T-shirts.

Fortunately, he was kind enough to give me directions to each one of Bob's five convenient locations (enough stores so that everyone is only a short ways away from becoming a non-conformist). He also said that I was in luck because this weekend at Bob's you can get a T-shirt for half price if you trade in an old Izod or Polo shirt (And the same applies for Levi's jeans with a trade-in of an old pair of khakis). I'm so excited, I can hardly wait to see if they'll take my Weejuns in trade for some unlaced Nikes!

Yessiree, the first thing I'm going to do this weekend is have Daddy give my half of his paycheck so that I can go to Bob's Surplus and fill the trunk of my BMW with Levi's, Nikes and T-shirts. I'm sick and tired of buying some pre-packaged identity whipped up by some country club geeks. Now I'll be able to blend clothing styles and create my own identity, and I won't have to get up at 5 a.m. anymore.

◊Kevin Hutt made an excellent point in his letter on Monday. It's a pity that it took the form of homage to his own sartorial heroism.

Douglas Healy

◊Dear Mr. Hutt,

WHO ARE YOU and where do you get off criticizing others? Yes, I am very offended by your dissatisfaction with preppies. The biggest problem I have with your anger is the amount of your ignorance. You have made many generalizations and have stereotyped people. If you desire to dress with freedom of choice, where do you get off criticizing others?

You have chosen to make a stereotype that makes preppies the beneficiaries of their father's wealth. I happen to be one of those people that you label a prep. I am very different than those you ostracize. Every article of clothing I wear I happened to have worked very hard to purchase myself. I also come from a town that you would have a field day stereotyping. I do not like to be stereotyped for where I come from or how I look. I have worked ever since I was able to so that I can buy whatever appeals to me. And if you ever bothered to take the time, you might have discovered that some of us preppies do have personalities that do not match those of your superficial foes!

Your comments on Polo and Izod clothing also demands some rebuttal. As a child my parents dressed me in Izod shirts, not because of status but because the shirts are high quality clothing. Today I follow the same philosophy: I would rather spend thirty-five dollars on a shirt than twelve and have it fall apart or lose its color in the wash.

You seem preoccupied with the preppy being overly conscious of how they look. On the contrary, you would not have felt compelled to write your letter if you were not as conscious of how you look.

If you ever saw me on the street you would most likely label me and choose to ignore me because of it. If you bothered to take the time out, you would realize that over this boundary that you have put up, that I am a human being also. I have chosen to dress this way because I like to. I do not dress this way to please others or you but myself.

I, like you, do not like to be judged by others. You would not like it if I judged you on your race, religion or social status. You obviously have a way that you have chosen to dress to express who you are. That was your choice and I would think that you would not like to be criticized for it. In the same way, I have chosen to dress the way I do and I hope people do not judge me by it.

I will reiterate my position once again. Do not judge or stereotype others when you do not wish the same in return. When you make generalizations like those that were printed you end up embarassing yourself by finding someone that you have offended. Finally , Mr. Hutt, my family does not own a BMW nor do we belong to any country club.

Doug Henning reappears for second-location show

Doug Henning, who has been acclaimed as the greatest magician of modern times, brings his magic to the Palace Theatre in New Haven on Friday, October 31 at 6:30 and 9:30 p.m. With his charming style and wonderous illusions, Doug has transformed the dying art of sorcery into a spectacular and enlightening form of entertainment.

He first became interested in magic at the age of six when he saw a magician levitate a woman on a television program. He practiced with a magic kit and studied magic books at the local library. At the early age of 14, he performed publicly for the first time at a friend's birthday party. Delighted with his ability to captivate an audience, Doug placed an ad in the local paper that read, "Magician, Have Rabbit, Will Travel."

Since that time, Doug Henning has traveled. He has traveled around the world performing and studying. He has made television shows, performed on Broadway, written a book as well as many special projects such as staged magic effects for rock groups.

Doug's originality has been attributed to his own bright, casual style. Having never seen a live magic performance until he was in his early adolescence, his shows developed with none of the dark, mysterious trappings of traditional magic. His goal is not to simply baffle an audience, but to create a feeling of wonder. Doug's colorful illusions and sparkling enthusiasm have become the trademarks of his magic.

"The art of a magician,"explains Doug, "is to renew our wonder for the world. If we live with a sense of wonder, our lives will be filled with joy." Doug has not only transformed magic into theatrical art, but thrilled new generations with his illusions. Through television, Broadway, and stage shows, millions have experienced the "sense of wonder" from Doug's modern wizardry.

SCSU gets bands

Schooner Fare, a nautical folk trio from Maine that has been performing to sell-out audiences throughout the Northeast, Midwest and across Canada for the past ten years, delighting all ages with their music, will be performing at Engleman Hall at Southern Connecticut State University, along with The Morgans. The concert will be on October 10 at 8:00p.m., and tickets will be $8.

From diverse careers they have combined talents to produce a unique sound. Writing much of their own material, they have the wonderful ability to bring American history to life through music. Schooner Fare has five record albums to its credit.

The Morgans: This all around good-time folk trio blends participatory songs from traditional, folk-revival and contemporary periods (including their own original material), with sea songs and chanteys.

Performing since 1971, The Morgans have recorded numerous record albums and have enjoyed a strong following in Connecticut.

Schooner, Incorporated is a non-profit organization providing research and education dedicated to the betterment of the marine environment. Schooner, Inc. has served the Long Island Sound region for eleven years.

Proceeds from this event will underwrite other Schooner, Inc. concerts, all of a nautical theme.

OR AFTER YOU GET IT.

It's a lot easier to fight cancer before you get it.
Scientists estimate that up to 60% of all cancer could be prevented.
By simply making a few changes in your lifestyle.
By not getting too much sun. By not smoking cigarettes. By not overeating. And by following a diet high in fiber and low in fat.
By simply doing these few things, you could drastically reduce your risk of getting cancer.
Sure, you could still get cancer.
But why not give yourself the odds against it?

Torchia fired by New Britain Sox

NEW BRITAIN, Conn (AP)--Tony Torchia has been fired as manager of the Eastern League's New Britain Red Sox and will not return to the Red Sox organization in any capacity, according to a report published Tuesday.

Torchia piloted the Class AA farm team of the American League Eastern Division champion Boston Red Sox to a seventh place finish this season. He has coached, managed or played for the Red Sox organization for the last 24 years.

In a story published Tuesday, The Herald newspaper of New Britain cited a team source as saying Torchia, 43, was fired over the weekend.

Torchia has an unpublished telephone number at his home in Cape Coral , F.L. and could not be reached for comment.

Ed Kenney Sr., Boston's vice president of player development, was in Sarasota, F.L., where calls to his telephone went unanswered.

Torchia had been bullpen coach for the Boston Red Sox in the 1985 season.

When he was let go from that position after the season, he harshly criticized management but accepted a position as manager of the New Britain minor league club.

"Fans saw a changed man from the effervescent manager of the 1982-85 Double A and Triple A minor league clubs," said New Britain Red Sox general manager Gerry Berthiaume. "But I'm sure that the managerial moves made by Boston last fall took an emotional toll on Tony."

Torchia began his stint in the Boston organization in 1963 as a player. His first year as a coach was with Winston Salme in the Carolina League in 1976. He then moved on to Bristol in 1978 before being promoted to Pawtucket in 1983.

Miami coach Johnson hopes to stay number 1

(AP)—Miami of Florida Coach Jimmy Johnson says he's wary about whether his team can remain No. 1 the rest of college football season, but Oklahoma Coach Barry Switzer thinks the Hurricanes should have smooth sailing.

"It's obviously early in the season and there's a lot of football left to be played," Johnson said. "I look at Miami of Ohio beating LSU, and I know that in this game you'd better be ready to play every week."

Miami, which beat Oklahoma 28-16 Saturday, replaced the Sooners as the top-ranked team in the Associated Press' weekly poll Tuesday by receiveing 56 of 58 first-place votes.

The Hurricanes have seven opponents remaining on the regular schedule with a combined record of 10-18-2 one of which, East Carolina, has the longest Division I losing streak at 13 games.

"They shouldn't stub their toe the rest of the way with the schedule they have, said Oklahoma Coach Barry Switzer after Saturday's loss.

Miami's remaining seven regular-season opponents are Northern Illinois (0-5), West Virginia (2-2), Cincinnati (2-2), Florida State (1-2-1), Pitt (2-1-1), Tulsa (3-2) and East Carolina (0-4). Only Florida State has been in the Top Twenty this year.

"It's ironic that statements have been made about the rest of our schedule," Johnson said. "Before we beat Florida and Oklahoma, everybody talked about how tough the West Virginia and Pitt games would be on the road, and Florida State at home."

"I know how good West Virginia, Pitt and Florida State can be. Florida State lost to Michigan by two points in Ann Arbor so I know how tough that game will be," Johnson added. "It's a lot tougher schedule than people think."

The Hurricanes received 1,156 out of a possible 1,160 points, with Alabama and Penn State the only other schools to receive first-place victory, each moved up one spot to be ranked second, third and fourth, respectively.

Penn State, which downed East Carolina, 42-17, moved from seventh to fifth, while Oklahoma dropped to sixth. Auburn and Arkansas advanced to eithth and ninth, and Southern California jumped from 12th to no. 10.

Fresno State, which failed to make last year's Top Twenty, despite an 11-0-1 record, made its first appearance in the Top Twenty in 44 years.

play for Foley, who was hurt in a collision with senior back Matt Mosher. Foley was playing in place of Horwath, who injured his foot a week ago in a 4-3 loss to Syracuse University.

Answer E, Steedman, definitely won't play. He's the assistant sports information director. He's on the list because he somewhat sarcastically suggested that he's the fifth-string keeper in the event of more keeper injuries.

On to Question 2.

URI, at 4-4, is in a three-way tie for eighth ranking in New England.

UConn would probably be ranked higher, but does not qualify for ranking because it doesn't meet the requirement of a minimum record of .500.

UConn crushed the University of Vermont early in the season. Vermont is tied with URI. UConn also played competitively in a 2-0 loss to first-place Boston University and a 2-1 upset loss to seventh-ranked Boston College. UConn held second-place Harvard to 1-1 tie in Cambridge.

On the surface, UConn may have a less than respectable record, but a quick analysis shows three one-goal losses, two of them in overtime and one to nationally-fourth-ranked North Carolina State. This adds up to a losing record, but not a wholly unrespectable one.

URI's schedule this year hasn't included too many top-notch teams.

My prediction: UConn 3, URI 0 (UConn hasn't given up a goal or lost at home this year); UConn goals scored by Dan Donigan, Kanto Lulaj and Steve Rammel.

The game will be broadcast live on 91.7 WHUS-FM beginning at 3 p.m.

Field hockey drops in ranking

UNH no longer number one after weekend loss

Lisa Lynch tries to block a pass up the sidelines in a game against Boston University. The field hockey team will travel to Harvard today at 3 p.m. (Mark Caswell photo).

By Kristen Kelleher
Daily Campus staff

The field hockey team is losing ground in the national rankings even when it does not lose any games. The poll, which came out on Tuesday, drops UConn from No. 3 to No. 4 and puts North Carolina No. 1 for the first time this season. The top four teams all have one loss.

The University of New Hampshire, which ranked No. 1 last week, was defeated by Penn State over the weekend. UNH dropped to No. 3 while Penn State jumped from No. 8 last week to No. 2 this week.

Coach Diane Wright said the teams were ranked on the strength of their schedules rather than who they have beaten, since all the top teams have one loss.

North Carolina was beaten by UNH early in the season, but is ranked higher than UNH in this week's poll.

"North Carolina has played a lot of teams in the top 10 already," Wright said. "The top eight teams are all very close."

The Huskies will travel to Cambridge, Ma. to play Harvard today to try to keep its two-game winning streak alive. The game will only be the third away game in nine total games for UConn.

Wright said she knows "a little bit" about Harvard.

"They beat Northeastern, so they have a strong team," Wright said. "They have a strong goal keeper and play as a team.

"Their field is slower so we will have to play a control game and not a long ball game," she said. "With a slower field it is too easy to get intercepted."

This Saturday's game is very important to the Huskies. They will face No. 2 ranked Penn State at 1:00 p.m. If UConn can beat Penn State it should move up in the rankings.

Rankings are very important at the end of the season since only the top six teams go to the championship playoffs.

Goalkeeper in question for soccer

By Paul Parker
Daily Campus Staff

Men's soccer fans can take the following two-question test concerning this afternoon's 3 o'clock game against the University of Rhode Island on the UConn soccer field.

Question 1: Who's going to play goalkeeper?

A. Rich Horwath
B. Tom Foley
C. Brian Hall
D. Kirn Hermberg
E. Chuck Steedman
F. None of the above

Question 2: Will the Huskies finally climb back to the .500 mark after being below it for six games?

A. Yes
B. Probably
C. Maybe
D. No
E. None of the above

Unfortunately, the answer book isn't written yet, but there are some pretty good bets.

The odds-on favorite for the answer to Question 1 is C. Answers A and B are both out with injuries. While X-rays turned up negative, both Horwath and Foley have been complaining of pain in their injured limbs. (Horwath hurt his foot and Foley hurt his elbow). Both are officially listed as "questionable", meaning an evaluation of their condition will be made sometime shortly after noon, but it's not likely they'll be ready.

Answer D, Hermberg, is the odds on favorite for back-up keeper. A freshman who has seen no varsity playing time is the fourth-string goalie.

Hall, who has been the third-string keeper, capped a shutout against Fordham University Sunday when he came in to
